	Chair Eleonora Federici, University of Ferrara Afternoon session: 14:00-17:00 Workshop Communicative Strategies in Advertising Emanuela Ammendola, Università Parthenope - Napoli There are numerous communicative strategies that underlie advertising. Many of them have a linguistic nature, while others leverage on images or on other multimodal aspects (Kress and van Leeuwen 2006). Our investigation draws on the application of the prototype theory, and its ability to generate scripts that identify and contextualize single events, to advertising (St. Amant 2015, 2017). Specifically, the analysis focuses on print advertising of mineral water in the US. The purpose is to demonstrate: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) the strategic manipulation of communication through the swap of scripts, even though they belong to very different other categories; 2) the discursive change resulting from the script swap. The selected corpus consists of 80 US print advertisements from 2015 to 2021, selected from advertisements that appeared in magazines and on billboards, from different brands. Preliminary empirical results show that mineral water is contextualized in several scripts, ranging from pharmaceuticals, nutrition, cosmetics, and even oenology. Chair Eleonora Federici, University of Ferrara

After a first general introduction on the nature and birth of political ecology (A. Alietti), A. Exner will deal with the topic of extractivism from a political ecology perspective, deepening the issue of ecologically unequal exchange, land grabbing and the imperial mode of living. G. D'Alisa will introduce the topic of social metabolism, looking at the case of waste (case study of Campania) and circular economy from a political ecology and ecological economics perspectives. Finally, V. Asara will provide an account of socio-environmental conflicts and social movements as well as on the alternative practices that these engender at the urban level (case study of Barcelona).
